Sehr Geherte, Herr Morris,

It has recently come to the notice of our clients (a major manufacturer of automobiles) that you are in flagrant breach of international trademark and copyright law in using a trademarked name, wholly owned by our clients.

To wit - your recent advertisements for your business as a Shepherd contains a likeness of your pet dog, Rover. Rover is a registered trademark and you are hereby ordered to cease and desist from using the name Rover for the following purposes:

- 1) To show or display your dog at any public event requiring that the dogs name be affixed or prominently shown in any periodicals, brochures or pamphlets
- 2) For the purpose of calling or controlling your dog within any private or public place
- 3) For the purpose of selling your dog or advertising the services of your dog.

We further require that you surrender your dog to us, the rightful owners of the dog's name, so that it may be destroyed to prevent further trademark infringements.

We trust that you will see sense in this matter and allow us to walk all over you.

Regards.

Oskar Arschloch
